

foster homes, and at work, living exemplary, Christian lives—a credit to the communities in which they live—to say nothing of the large number who left the Institution prior to ten years ago, many of whom are occupying prominent positions in religious, professional or business life.

THE SUM TOTAL OF RESULTS, from this work, however, can never be measured in this life. To bring sunshine and happiness into a darkened life and inspire it with hope and promise; to make a better world in which to live; to be of service to others and to save immortal souls is the mission of Oxford Orphanage. There is every reason to believe that the God of truth and righteousness has set His seal of approval on this work, and is speaking and working in and through an Institution like this. What greater incentive could there possibly be to encourage unselfish and benevolent gifts and deeds?
